

January 1, 2019

Boston Business Journal: 11 Mass. business leaders to watch in 2019

By Boston Business Journal

<https://www.bizjournals.com/boston/news/2019/01/01/11-mass-business-leaders-to-watch-in-2019.html>

As another year goes into the books, it's worth examining exactly who's going to make a big splash as the calendar turns to January.

This year's roster of business leaders to watch in the upcoming year includes an outspoken city official, a local surgeon who's aiming to reform health care for three of the country's most prominent corporations, and the head of a real estate developer that plans to reshape the area around the famed Citgo sign.

And who knows, the list for 2020 may even include one of several Massachusetts politicians who have been rumored as U.S. presidential candidates, should they still be in the running.

Click through the slideshow above to see the list — compiled by the Boston Business Journal staff — of who we'll be watching in 2019.

W. Marc Bernsau | Boston Business Journal

Kimberly Sherman Stamler

Title: President of Related Beal

With Boston Mayor Martin J. Walsh vetoing the Citgo sign's landmark designation, Related Beal will now have full reign to reshape a block of Kenmore Square as it sees fit. The firm also has a number of other major developments at play, particularly in Boston's Seaport District, where it's betting big on future life sciences real estate cluster.